Document 2: US 5725577 A1 (Allen SAXON), 10 March 1998, entire text, all drawings

Claims 1 to 6 and 13 to 15

Document 1 cited in the international search report discloses an in-vivo grafting material which is configured by laminating an ePTFE sheet that promotes the inward growth of tissues, an ePTFE sheet with a pore size that prevents the inward growth or the adhesion of tissues and a sheet of an imperforate material. Furthermore, a person skilled in the art could have optimized the size of the pores in order to promote the inward growth of tissues, as appropriate.

Claims 7 to 9

Bubble point tests are well known and commonly used as a means for estimating the size of the pores in a porous material; therefore, a person skilled in the art could use the bubble point pressure as a parameter for expressing the size of the pores, as appropriate.

Box No. V Reasoned statement under Article 35(2) with regard to novelty, inventive step or industrial applicability; citations and explanations supporting such statement

Claims 10 to 12

It would have been easy for a person skilled in the art to conceive of employing the structure that is disclosed in document 2 cited in the international search report, wherein the sheet that allows the inward growth of tissues is extended so as to be exposed to the outside around the perimeter of the sheet that does not allow the inward growth of tissues, in the invention that is disclosed in document 1.

Claims 16 to 18

Document 1 discloses the feature of configuring so that the peripheral edge parts of the in-vivo grafting material have a three-layer structure.

Claim 19

A person skilled in the art could configure so that each sheet in the in-vivo grafting material that is disclosed in document 1 has a different color, as appropriate.
